
Azerbaijani Society Is Gradually Approaching The Critical Boiling Point

Karine Ter-Sahakyan

PanARMENIAN.Net - 29/11/2008

With his latest statement the Azerbaijani President came close to Mikhail Saakashvili. The only difference is that in preserving his power Aliyev will be supported by Islamic countries, instead of the West.

Judging by the renewed bellicose statements of the Azerbaijani President, internal political situation in the country is far from the bright image that the clan of Aliyevs is presenting to the world. The great drop in prices of oil has already found a reflection in the Azeri press, which is "carefully" hinting that the world crisis has had its say also on Azerbaijan. The flow of petrodollars is already thinning into a narrow stream and, as a result, the poor society of Azerbaijan is finally slipping into a precipice. It is only Baku that is prospering, while the rest of Azerbaijan can see no bright spot in their hard lives.

/PanARMENIAN.Net/ Thus, people must once more be entrapped into a war, and it must be done on international level. In his interview with RAI International Italian-language channel, Ilham Aliyev stated that "The Moscow declaration on the Karabakh problem does not deprive Baku of the right to settle this conflict by way of force. This declaration does not include any commitment, preventing Azerbaijan from the forced way and therefore, hoping for a political settlement, we must at the same time be ready for taking any kind of measures including use of force, which has never been and is not inadmissible". As a matter of fact, Azeri politicians have never been able to adequately perceive the reality. The only exception used to be Heydar Aliyev, who did his best to keep his son from a destructive war. However, the son went dizzy with dithyrambs and luxurious life, though he used to have the latter even as a child. But it happens: people are born either poor or rich. You can be poor with a million and rich without a penny in your pocket. Apparently, Ilham Aliyev belongs to the first group. But, be that as it may, with his latest statement the Azerbaijani President came close to Mikhail Saakashvili. The only difference is that in preserving his power Saakashvili relied on the West, while Aliyev will be supported by Islamic countries, whose influence in Azerbaijan has been rapidly growing. It may even so happen that Ankara turns its back on Baku, in spite of today's pledges of friendship and mutual support. And the Islamic factor, or to be more exact the Wahhabi one, is growing more and more influential in Azerbaijan. Moreover, according to observations by Azeri conflict analyst Arif Yunusov, "Adherents of radical Islam are not only the poor or the unemployed, but also a great number of young people with European education."

In Yunusov's words, "The Azerbaijani public is disappointed in the United States, Israel and in western countries in general, so burning of the U.S. or Israeli flag doesn't make a stir. There are three trends in the Azeri society: pro-western, pro-Russian and pro-Islamic. The most serious factor is political Islam, which appears as a power capable to regain Karabakh. Islamists also say that the world powers will come, pump out all Azeri oil and then leave Azerbaijan to the mercy of fate. There is also a sense of helplessness before Russia. Both the USA and the West make nothing for our country except for declaratory statements. So, European Union is Azerbaijan's last hope and it can help resolution of the Nagorno Karabakh conflict," declared Yunusov at an international conference in Yerevan.

The clan of Aliyevs perfectly realizes that if the nation's rage is not shifted to a favourable direction, it can easily "wipe out" the Government. The Azerbaijani society is gradually coming to the critical boiling point, and repeatedly mentioning about the enemy, whose image has been so faithfully and keenly cherished for 70 years, can at least temporarily attract the Azeri people who hang themselves, shoot themselves, and in despair kill their relatives and friends. Moreover, Azerbaijani authorities continue falsifications and lies on the bones of thousands of Lezghins and Tats, who in 1918-1919 were killed by Musavatists in the Kubin district of South Lezghistan that now forms part of Azerbaijan.

According to Information Agency "Khabal" the Azerbaijani authorities have launched excavations in the sites where, consistent with Azerbaijani archive documents, mass burials of the Lezghins are to have taken place. "In order to deny their contribution in the killings of local peaceful people, the Azerbaijani Academy of Sciences decided to shift the blame on ... Armenians..., what could be expected if we take into account the stupid anti-Armenian propaganda in the country," the agency reports.

Thus, the war "till final victory" is still ahead. Besides the Armenians, Lezghins, and Tats, there are also the Talishes, Udins, and other national minorities, who are subject to "azerbaijanization" or extermination. Psychology of nomads is not capable of anything else.
