Islamic Republic News Agency - 24/10/2007

---

President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad said on Wednesday that Tehran is ready to form new consortium with various world countries for new installations.

Speaking to reporters, he said since Iran should generate 20,000 megawatts of nuclear electricity these consortium could be established in various parts of the world.

"Since Iran has gained access to technological know-how to generate nuclear electricity, We never let others interfere and we ourselves have the final say in these technological matters," he said.

"We are to safeguards the legitimate rights of our nation and let other countries come to terms for establishing such jointly run consortium," Ahmadinejad pointed out.

On Iran's nuclear dossier, he said the case has been referred to the International Atomic Energy Agencies.

"Since we abide by the rules and regulations of the IAEA, there is no concern on declaring our nuclear activities to IAEA," he said.

He underlined that Iran has always been a member of IAEA and the body has always monitored the country's nuclear activities.

"We believe in dialogue in resolving our issues," underlined the president.

"As a member of IAEA, we call for inspecting the nuclear facilities of other members while letting them inspect ours as well," Ahmadinejad underlined.

Based on IAEA letter of association and NPT, Iran as a member of IAEA is authorized to possess nuclear fuel but 'if others put pressure on us to negotiate to this end, we completely reject this and are determined not to come to terms on our legal rights'.

"A number of European countries seek to play a much active role in our region and we can help them based on meeting nations rights as well as governing rules and administration of justice," underlined the president.

On Iran's nuclear dossier which is still in the UNSC, he said these are only worthless paper works and their efforts have no impacts on Iran's political developments.

"The enthusiastic welcome accorded to Iranian delegation in Armenia proves that our opponents have been isolated," pointed out the president.

"We suggest to those who claim that Iranian officials have been isolated to specify a place for the two sides to be present to see who has been isolated," concluded the president.
