
Turkey Tries To Oppose The Official Yerevan To Diaspora

AZG Armenian Daily - 26/09/2008

The enthusiasm in Turkish officials and representatives' speeches on Armenian-Turkish relations prompts that the Turkish government has great expectations of the Armenian authorities. Moreover, as long as the Genocide recognition remains the knottier question for Turkey, the Turkish officials will speak more enthusiastically about formation of a joint body. As enthusiastically that even Turkish Foreign Minister Ali Babacan assured the Turkish and international news agencies on September 10 after Serzh Sargsian - Abdullah Gul meeting that "the issue should be observed as settled, as Serzh Sargsian gave his consent to it (creation of such a body)".

In other words, without even creating such a body and discussing any question, the Turkish authorities try to form an international opinion about stopping the process of the Genocide recognition in order to prepare a diplomatic-advocating march in the nature "We are negotiating. Why are you hindering us from doing it?"

Moreover, not only the Turkish advocacy but also the consent of the executive bodies of the countries that restrain their parliamentarians from raising the issue of the Genocide contribute to the above-mentioned.

Ali Babacan, like other Turkish representatives, show an unusual thoughtfulness for the people of Armenia underlining their sufferings and needs without even asking himself what percent of those sufferings are because of Turkish enmity. Of course, not the compassion is the reason of the Turkish Foreign Minister's crocodile tears but the aspiration to oppose Armenia to Diaspora. "On the one hand the suffering people, on the other hand the well-off and surfeited Diaspora that is in a position of power in Europe and United States", Ali Babacan said adding, "The agendas of these two are different".

We cannot agree with the last expression and want to correct it - the difference is not between the Armenians in motherland and Diaspora, but between the official Yerevan and the people in general.

Yes, the governments sometimes may have agendas different from their people. And the governments cannot demand lands if in case of negative answer they have no ready guns. And not even repayment for the sufferings and losses. But different (agendas) doesn't mean opposite. And the Armenian authorities should be very cautious in their announcements and statements, in order there will not be contrary agendas and in order our opponents will not take the opportunity. On the contrary, the agendas should be systematized, and distribution of roles should be organized.
